The Land Titles Office is a Municipal Heritage Property prominently located on four lots in a mature residential neighbourhood in Prince Albert. Constructed during 1891-1892, the property features a 1½-storey, brick building surrounded by a stone fence.

The heritage value of the Land Titles Office resides in its association with the land settlement rush to Prince Albert and area during the late 19th Century and the Dominion Government's policies in encouraging this settlement. Construction of the building was authorized by the Dominion Department of Public Works, under the supervision of their Chief Architect, Thomas Fuller, assisted by architect H.D. Johnson. Initially built to provide office space for the local registrar of land titles and the Crown Timber Board, the building was also used as an immigration office after its opening in 1892.

This property has been designated as a property of architectural, historical or natural value under the City of Prince Albert Bylaw No. 36 of 1986 - Municipal Heritage Property Bylaw - Land Titles Office.
